Performance Management: What to Expect as a Colleague

This article walks you through the annual performance cycle from your side of the process. Managers follow a separate article for the calibration step.

The cycle at a glance

Window	What happens	Your action
January	Goals open in Workday	Draft three to five goals
February 15	Goal approval closes	Confirm goals with your manager
July	Mid-year check-in	Write a short progress note
November 1 - 20	Self-review window	Submit your self-review
December	Manager reviews and calibration	No action
Late January	Review conversations	Attend your review meeting

Writing your self-review

The self-review is capped at 400 words per goal. Managers consistently say the most useful reviews are specific rather than long. Name the work, say what changed because of it, and name the people you worked with.

1. Open Workday, then Performance, then My Reviews.
2. For each goal, describe what you delivered and the measurable result.
3. Add up to three examples of how you worked, not just what you delivered.
4. Flag anything that blocked you, including dependencies outside your control.
5. Submit by 11:59 p.m. local time on November 20. Late submissions still count but may not reach your manager before calibration.

What your manager sees

Your manager sees your goals, your self-review, and any feedback you requested through Workday. Your manager does not see draft text you have not submitted, and does not see feedback that another colleague marked private to HR.

Ratings

Meridian uses a four-level scale. The definitions below are the same ones your manager uses, so there is no hidden rubric.

Rating	Meaning
Exceptional	Delivered beyond the scope of the role and raised the bar for others
Strong	Delivered the full scope of the role well

Fictional sample content created for a search demo. Not a real policy.

Rating	Meaning
Developing	Delivered part of the scope; specific gaps are named in the review
Below	Did not deliver the scope; a formal plan follows

If you disagree with your review

Tell your manager during the conversation and ask for the specific examples behind the rating. If you still disagree after that conversation, you have ten (10) business days to add a written comment to the review in Workday. The comment becomes part of the record. You may also contact an Employee Relations Partner.

Time away during the cycle

Approved leave does not lower a rating. If you were out for a significant part of the year, your manager is expected to evaluate the work you did during the time you were present, not to prorate you downward for being away.

Related articles

- KB0011330 - Workday navigation: finding your time off balance
- HR-171 Performance Management Policy in Policy Hub

Fictional sample content created for a search demo. Not a real policy.